Auditor Report:

I've talked to the club president for a few times but it seems that we're fixed on those points that we agree upon at the beginning. And since green certification was not the priority of their agenda, they did not read the green checklist thoroughly nor try to go for more points. Communication is a critical issue that I had with the club president and there was not much progress even after the meeting. The club president is the only one who wanted to green certifies the group and does not have the support from the officers nor the participants. There is no official Sustainability Officer in the group and many of the members do not even know that the group is participating in the Green Certification Program. The club structure of Berkeley Ballroom is similar to a sport club, with many participants but only a few officers to run the events and competitions. For such a large scale club, there are not enough officers to take care of everything.

The club president may have thought about some ways to reduce the carbon footprint, but the overall group did not make much of an effort. I do not think that this group should be Green Certified.

I conduct a drop-in audit at the meeting. It was to inform all the officers in Berkeley Ballroom about the Green Certification Program and see whether or not they want to continue it. They admitted that the Green Certification Program was not their priority and went over some of the problems they were having with their club and how that affect their ability to keep track with the Green Certification Program. Their events were not green certified so I did not conduct a drop-in audit on their event.
